

Iris Jamahl Dunkle: Two Poems [1]

September 30, 2015 Featured Poetry [2]

Math Poetry [3]

Home Is an Uncanny Valley

if the rain continues

then we may lose our escape down the gravel-throated drive

<truth> we are hungry for the rain </truth>

if the rain edits the earth of the fields

if the rain rewrites the soapstone creek bed

if the ditches we dug into the earth just yesterday overflow

then the path back to ourselves could be blurred by the many rainstorms before

LIST# 1987, 1992, 2005

PRINT# Each flood, spilling into the next like a series of connected lakes.

<fear> the child looking out the rain-freckled window could be ourselves </fear>

<truth> we are hungry for the rain </truth>

<fear> we are hungry for the truth </fear>

The reservoirs are low, exposing what we'd forgotten: old logs, rusted cars, a body or two.

if we flood again

then we could forget the hunger

then we could forget what's underneath, exposed if home is an uncanny valley AND we walk toward it, see that it is too much like ourselves to believe then the fields, the creek beds, the gravel-throated drive will scream muddy loud

<fear> the child looking out the rain-freckled window could be ourselves </fear>

<truth> we are hungry for the rain </truth>

<fear> we are hungry for the truth </fear>

Let home = null/washed new/a place built upon a place

Let memory fade like a fog

Let the child at the window be my child, not myself

Let the water find its path back

Let the rain spell out a truth on the tin roof above our sleeping heads

Let path out open like a mouth

Hybrid

Algorithm

at Luther Burbank Gardens, Santa Rosa

Mounds of earth like open graves grammared by stones and toothy Shasta daisies.

Sensory garden, medicinal garden, garden of starts and failures.

To question history is to watch the chaos of its particles glisten into discernable patterns.

We loosen embedded stones with our toes amongst the trees that grow into each other.

We ask: where is he buried?
Light caught in the fingers of trees.

We ask: where are the unattested species recorded?
Indecipherable writing in notebooks sketches of leaves, a seed as big as a child's fist.

Please do not record inside.
Please do not disturb the war of air outside.

Iris Jamahl Dunkle: Two Poems

Published on Talking Writing (<https://mail.talkingwriting.com>)

What's pushing up—ache of earth against this litany of breeding air—from mind to mind to mouth to air.

Patterns illuminate—a nestle of leaves from the ghost of a fallen tree—cedar of Lebanon.

The breeding between what will be and what will be left for us to believe.

Art Information

- "A Lot of Rain" [4](Jesse H. Jones Park and Nature Center, Humble, Texas) © Patrick Feller; Creative Commons license.

Iris Jamahl Dunkle's debut poetry collection, Gold Passage, was published by Trio House Press in 2013. Her second manuscript, Interrupted Geographies, was a finalist for the 2012 Colorado Prize for Poetry. She's also published two chapbooks with Finishing Line Press, Inheritance (2010) and The Flying Trolley (2013). Her poetry, creative nonfiction, and scholarly articles have appeared in numerous publications, including Poet's Market 2013, Crab Orchard Review, Fence, LinQ, VOLT, The Mom Egg, The Squaw Valley Writers Review, and Talking Writing.

Dunkle currently teaches writing at Napa Valley College and Clarion University and with California Poets in the Schools (CPITS). She is on the staff of the Napa Valley Writers conference and resides with her family in northern California.

Source URL: <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/iris-jamahl-dunkle-two-poems>

Links:

- [1] <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/iris-jamahl-dunkle-two-poems>
- [2] <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/talkingwriting-categories/featured-poetry>
- [3] <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/talkingwriting-categories/spotlight-math-poetry>
- [4] <https://flic.kr/p/6iLWrZ>