

The Grimm Forest Open-Air Museum [1]

October 17, 2016 Featured Poetry [2]
Prose Poetry [3]

Hybrid Poetry by Sarah Ann Winn

An Exhibition Catalog Pamphlet

Introduction, pg. i-iv (foldout, words in large print)

Audio tours are available at the front desk free of charge.

Some stories are meant to be heard and not seen. Some stories are unspeakable.

Please stay on the path. The management can make no guarantees for your safety should you stray.

Note: This exhibition is made possible with a grant from the Gold Egg Foundation and the generosity of museum patrons, like and not at all like yourself.

Wunderkind Sculpture Garden, pg. 3-6

Room full of bones from brothers, broken stories pieced together. In retelling, sometimes brothers conspire against brothers, sometimes sisters fragment.

Set of Rooms Demonstrating Cartographic Features, pg. 7

Islands may accrue over time, gathering meaning and mass, but story keeps shifting, maybe composed of magma, something too hot to delve into. A shoe half formed from molten glass, a forehead grows from slow moving lava. Scientists observe from a safe distance the cooling shore forming beneath the rumpled surface, consider what new lands might crop up.

Burial mounds are best left alone. Ill-advised core samples may reveal rocks piled in such a way to suggest reverence, or may trigger traps, disturb sleeping curses.

Forests: Where are the forests of childhood? Golden and green, innocent rustlings produce rabbits from shaded pockets, giants kneel to scoop more pleasant paths for a brook.

Forests, again: Spanish moss can be applied easily, tangled poison ivy and moths-waiting-to-hatch will decimate what might have been the frame for a soft green panel.

Rivers and Streams: The ice held her. The ice grew ornamented. The ice dangled bulbs above the unfrozen rush.

Lakes: Scattered so far that nobody notices how they can be puzzle-fitted back together. Look at the shores, how they try to write in cursive. Look at the inlets, shallows form a sign.

Wall of Diagnosed Malaises, pg. 8

Sleeping Beauty, hemopheliac Faints, a false sleep, loses too much blood, even one drop is enough.

Snow White, anemic
Should have eaten more red meat.
The heart of the doe would go a long way.

Little Boy Blue, situational depression
Has not picked up his instrument for weeks, nor dressed in blue, nor confided in friends.

Thumbelina, cecropia

Her rags could be mistaken for night flight, her size for her might.

Frog Prince, webbed fingers

Wishes he could wear gloves, always sucks a mint, fears his wife will leave him for an ornamental koi.

Gretl, anorexic, bulimic

Nothing to do with mirrors.
Once she and her brother went hungry to leave a trail,
and although it didn't work,
even now she thinks if she were thinner, she could slip the bars.

Wall of Undiagnosed Malaises, pg. 9

Toads or diamonds disgorged when speaking Uncontrollable sprouting of feathers
Tendency to be not only beautiful but good Tendency to expect wishes will be granted
Tendency to have wishes granted
Tendency to look for what's deserved

Hands-on Activity Room, pg. 10

Tie the bedsheets, escape the avid in-laws, Jump through similar hoops to ones set by a mother for prospective daughter-in-laws. Fairy feels real.
Press your palm
into the dewed grass.

Leave the print
to set for a decade.
Return to dismantle
a tower with your roots.
Play the ivy. Tear down stones, grasping fingers in every hold,
refuse to take cement for an answer.

See how centuries-
old houses crumble,

the futile words hurled
after the gone away,
the empty ever after.

Art Information

- "Bone [4]" © Terje Asphaug; Creative Commons license (image has been modified).

Sarah Ann Winn's poems, flash fiction, and hybrid works have appeared or will appear soon in Calyx, Five Points, Hayden's Ferry Review, Massachusetts Review, and Passages North, among others. Her chapbooks include Field Guide to Alma Avenue and Frew Drive (Essay Press, 2016); Haunting the Last House on Holland Island, Fallen into the Bay (Porkbelly Press, 2016); and Portage (Sundress Publications, 2015).

Visit Sarah Ann Winn at her website Bluebird Words [5] or follow her @blueaisling. [6]

Source URL: <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/grimm-forest-open-air-museum>

Links:

- [1] <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/grimm-forest-open-air-museum>
[2] <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/talkingwriting-categories/featured-poetry>
[3] <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/talkingwriting-categories/spotlight-prose-poetry>
[4] <https://www.flickr.com/photos/33010465@N04/3079913809/>
[5] <https://bluebirdwords.com/>
[6] <https://twitter.com/blueaisling>