Witnessed in the Convex Mirror: Ravished in the Raw

Sifting the April sunlight for clues I notice buds late to their blossoming, a flaw that makes one realize sunlight offers no clues; it only reveals what already existed before its random illumination. Its light may reveal buds tardy to becoming plums, apricots, or pears. The revelation may make you sensitive to the plight of bees—how chemicals and other human-made pollution are destroying their habitat, causing them, in turn, to destroy more habitat. War always spirals, unless it defeats itself, thus ends. But it's rare for an impulse to want to end itself—that's another truth for which sunlight cannot take credit. To what one sees when light touches down in front of you (lightly like a plane controlled by the most seasoned pilot, or darkly like a sudden and unseasonal storm), only you can decide your response. Don't bother hiring bodyguards—they wait on you to decide your next move before sunset and you are left in the darkness that, like April and sunlight, offers no clues as to how to comprehend how you, once praised by parents and teachers for "brilliant potential," now sift through images of the unripened as if you are among them, yet better than them
