

Sleep Study [1]

May 6, 2019 Featured Poetry [2]

Disabled Poets Take on... [3]

Poem by Jeffrey Erlacher

Sleep Study

Marisol informs me that I stop breathing during sleep throwing the lungs into a fit the riotous bleating of life pulling at life awakens her, frightens her

I say it happens in my roused hours, too when the stars are present even if difficult to see the negative scene oxygenates my brain

Sleep Study

Published on Talking Writing (<https://mail.talkingwriting.com>) when the inanimate parts the surgeons placed in me sing the air with ache and disconnection and the inward stare forgets to respire when a poem I read thumps the wind from me and like the printed page its transmission requires no breath she feels the need to nudge me back into being away from the precipice of drowning in dreams

she'd like someone to drink her morning coffee with

I think my reptilian brain has never quite worked properly survival eyes and rote movements couldn't ever fully be trusted instinct without thought in a world this alive

I like how the light fades slowly from my closed eyes

forms a green darkness from concentric stars only I can see how the moment hypothesizes itself stitches together a blank quire how it risks meaning nothing

Marisol knows the limits of breath how there's only so much outcome in our effort she remembers the tube down my throat the nineteen hours of surgery that did not exist for me until they were gone

I tell her it's taken me the last hundred and fifty years of human history to find my voice somewhere between "you'd be dead if not for"

and "sorry for not meaning to say" not yet a storm, just a depression that I submit to historicity in a way that ensures our mutual misunderstanding how all things move glacially, even my teeth

Sleep Study

Published on Talking Writing (<https://mail.talkingwriting.com>)

blessed are the well-armed the sound of hearts opening and closing

Art Information

- “Portlandish Lights” © Nelson Lowhim; used by permission.

Jeffrey Erlacher is a writer and educator living in Denver, Colorado. His poetry has recently been published in The Remembered Arts Journal, Midwest Review, and Brushfire. He also wrote a children's novel, The Little Palace, forthcoming from Zimbell House.

For more information, visit Jeffrey Erlacher's website [4] or @erlacherjeffrey [5] on Twitter.

Source URL: <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/sleep-study>

Links:

[1] <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/sleep-study>

[2] <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/talkingwriting-categories/featured-poetry>

[3] <https://mail.talkingwriting.com/tw-channels-and-categories/disabled-poets-take>

[4] <http://www.jeffreyerlacher.com>

[5] <https://twitter.com/@erlacherjeffrey>