Poetry by Paula Bonnell

The Muse of Bad Poems

feeds you a great opening line then follows it up with weak imitations of lines from some of your better old poems.

The Muse of Bad Poems
has a day job in an ad agency and insists that you call her

"The Muse of BP."

She says, "Just hum me a few bars" — as though you were the one in charge of this gig.

The Muse of Bad Poems got
"Talks Too Much"
checked on the conduct section of her report card.
In the same marking period you got a check in "Can't Seem to Listen."

The Muse of BP
shops off-price
and goes for the mall-store labels.
You can always avoid her by heading for your favorite thrift store.

The Muse of Bad Poems watches as you write your way down the page to your habitual ending spot, then with a straight face she hands you — on a silver salver if one is handy — a small anticlimax.
