Poetry by Khalil Elayan

Seasonal

The pines gather densely like old monks,
tall and gaunt,
wearing evergreen cloaks.

Their brittle fingers pick at each other.

(function(i,s,o,g,r,a,m){i['GoogleAnalyticsObject']=r;i[r]=i[r]||function(){ (i[r].q=i[r].q||[]).push(arguments)},i[r].l=1*new Date();a=s.createElement(o), m=s.getElementsByTagName(o)[0];a.async=1;a.src=g;m.parentNode.insertBefore(a,m) })(window,document,'script','https://www.google-analytics.com/analytics.js','ga'); ga('create', 'UA-18260536-1', 'auto'); ga('send', 'pageview');

This is the only language they speak.

Other trees gather, willy-nilly,
naked, unlike the brethren
hooded in shadows.

A paved snake winds its way
through the crowd of bark and needle,
tempting winter monasticism to fail.

Air is light and quick
as my vehicle plows its weak resistance.

I want to stop and break a dead branch
—or two
from a poor monk’s trunk

But this silly play
hinders not my snake bend,
nor the speed at which I take it.

I plow on.

Wood smoke is pervasive
and copies my paved serpent,
creating barriers among brothers.

Smoke, balsam, and memory
perfume the horizon…
whetting my appetite for leisure

and regret.

In pursuit of a holiday,
I have found solitude—

and Satori.
